James Biere Marceau appointed President of Celerant Government Services

LEXINGTON, Mass., Jan. 12, 2010 -- James Biere Marceau was recently named President of Celerant Government Services, Inc. (CGSI). With this appointment, Mr. Marceau will lead the company's overall activities including identifying and shaping new business opportunities and developing and executing strategy. He will also serve on CGSI's Board of Directors.

"James has a history of success managing and developing complex organizations," said Ian Clarkson, CEO of Celerant Consulting. "His notable experience with some of the world's largest companies and Government entities and his proven ability to deliver results will support our accomplishments with existing clients while shaping and growing a successful future business for Celerant Government Services."

"I am excited to be supporting our Department of Defense and Civilian Agency clients," said Mr. Marceau. "Celerant's fresh and innovative approach provides Government clients an opportunity to optimize operations across the value chain."

Mr. Marceau has over 20 years of experience in the government, manufacturing, life sciences, consumer products and technology sectors specializing in global business strategy, supply chain optimization and transformation, asset lifecycle management, financial analysis and performance, operational strategy, and growth strategies. He joined Celerant in January of 2009.

Previously, he was a Senior Partner at Mercer Oliver Wyman (part of Marsh McLennan Companies, MMC), where his work spanned multiple industries and sectors. His engagements at Mercer Oliver Wyman concentrated on global business strategy and supply chain management. Prior to this, he was a Senior Managing Partner and practice leader at CapGemini (Ernst & Young), with assignments in the US, Asia and Europe and a strategic focus on Government.

Mr. Marceau earned a Bachelors of Science degree in Business from the University of Colorado and a Masters in International Business from The University of Miami.
